Educational Goals and Objectives	The PhD course aims to enable participants to develop theoretical and methodological knowledge, in a multidisciplinary approach, on the topic of the relationship between law and service sector, with particular attention to the legal framework of the services, due to their increasing differentiation and the role undertaken in contemporary economies. Several scientific-disciplinary areas of legal field are involved: private law, commercial law, constitutional law, public law, tax law, criminal law, international law, European Union law, philosophy of law. The program envisages in the first two years the compulsory attendance of lectures and seminars on specific subjects of the course (companies and contracts which have as their subject matter the provision of services, consumer protection, services of general economic interest and content and limits of the so called universal services, services law in the health and logistic sector, tourism law, digital services and big data, media and telecommunications law, tax system related to innovative and technological services, European framework concerning freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, contracts related to international services, comparative analysis between different systems, ways of protection of rights affected during the provision of services). The course will continue during the third year with an intensive research activity, placed side by side with the participation in thematic seminars. In addition, the PhD program provides some lectures and seminars to be held in English. PhD students will be also encouraged to spend minimum three months in foreign universities or foreign research institutions, in particular those which are part of the consortium, by using the resources allocated for these activities (eg. extra money for abroad experiences), whether for research or training activities).
Coordinator	Prof. Cristina Schepisi
Participation Requirements	Possession of one of the following qualifications: Master's Degree (Laurea Magistrale) or a unique cycle Master's Degree or an equivalent title.
